A Letter from Rabbi Bigman

I remember sitting in one of my first undergraduate psychology courses at the University of Michigan listening to the professor talk about the mourning process. The professor noted that people go through various stages following the death of a loved one:

First, there is the state of disbelief, the state of shock at learning of someone's death. Then there is the need to remove yourself from the mundane tasks of daily living as you begin the grieving process. Slowly but surely you return to 'normal,' resuming your daily lifestyle. Yet on special days, such as birthdays, anniversaries, and holidays, your sense of loss is heightened; you remember your loved one even more on these days.

As I listened to my professor, I realized that all of this sounded very familiar to me. Long before psychology was a course of study, our ancestors had recognized these stages of mourning and developed rituals to help us deal with each of them.

As a rabbi, I deal with death on a regular basis. When I meet with a bereaved family, I try to keep in mind the two basic principles by which Jewish death and mourning rites are governed: k'vod ha-met, "the dignified or respectful treatment of the dead," and k'vod he-chai, "the honored treatment of the living (the surviving relatives)." I talk to the family about Jewish mourning customs. I encourage them to explore these rituals as they can be a source of great comfort.

I was reminded of this truth once again during my family's recent bereavement. Although my dad had been declining and we had started hospice care for him, it was still surreal to receive the call from my sister, as I sat in my doctor's waiting room for my yearly physical, that our dad had died. Thus began the time of aninut ("deep sorrow or distress"). This is the time from death until burial. During this time of distress, the mourners are not obligated to pray or carry out other religious duties; the mourners must concern themselves with making the funeral arrangements. I spent the rest of the day cancelling appointments, ensuring coverage for worship services, notifying family and friends, making plane reservations to Florida, etc.

The day of the funeral, prior to the closing of the casket, we were able to see my dad one last time. While painful to see him, it was also comforting to know that he was no longer in distress. Earth from Israel was placed in the coffin, beneath the body, symbolizing the connection that Jews around the world feel toward Israel.

A funeral director once told me that the funeral is a time for remembrance and for saying "thank you." Selections from the Book of Psalms especially emphasize this spirit of thanksgiving. Hearing these traditional words recited by Rabbi Marci Bloch of Temple Dor Dorim in Weston, Florida, who grew up in the same congregation as I did, were a source of comfort. Writing and delivering my dad's eulogy was a challenge but also comforting to me.

The second stage of mourning is shivah, from the Hebrew word for "seven," the seven days of mourning beginning immediately following burial. My mother chose to observe a shorter shivah period. There is so much solace derived from being together as a family during this time (although, admittedly, it can also be somewhat stressful to all be constantly together for an extended period of time!). Overall, this was a wonderful opportunity to share stories and memories of my dad, and to be comforted by the presence of some cousins and my parents' friends.

But this comfort didn't stop with the conclusion of our shivah period. When I returned to East Lansing, I found notes of condolence and notices of contributions made to various organizations in memory of my father. Our tradition notes that by giving tzedakah the memory of the deceased lives on in good deeds. Those cards and donations were therefore an additional source of strength and comfort as I considered the good works that will occur in my dad's memory. Furthermore, saying my father's name before Kaddish during Shabbat services each week during sheloshim, the thirty-day period of time beginning with the burial, brought me much consolation.

As is our custom, I will remember my dad during Yizkor on Yom Kippur, Shemini Atzeret, Pesach, and Shavuot each year and on his yahrtzeit.

May Ronald Bigman's memory be a blessing to our family and to all who knew him.

We are looking for volunteers to put up the Shaarey Zedek Sukkah on Tuesday, September 26. Please contact Rabbi Bigman at rabbibigman@shaareyzedek.com. Thank you for doing this mitzvah.

Sisterhood Silent Auction

November 19

Shaarey Zedek Sisterhood is excited to invite you to participate in our silent auction on November 19 inside the Davis Family Social Hall during the annual Sisterhood Super Sale. We are counting on your generous support to make it a resounding success.

Why Donate?

Donating items to the silent auction is a wonderful way to support Sisterhood. Your contributions can be anything from new or gently used goods to unique experiences and services.

Here is why your donations matter:

- Supporting a Worthy Cause – By donating items or services, you are directly supporting our efforts to promote closer fellowship among members and support religious, social, and educational activities at Shaarey Zedek
- Building a Stronger Community – By donating, you demonstrate your commitment to creating a stronger and more supportive Jewish community for everyone.
- Showcasing Your Talents – Are you an artist, artisan, or business owner? Donating your creations or services to the auction promotes your talent and helps create a unique and diverse array of items for others to bid on.

Why Attend?

By stopping by on November 19 to bid on items, you will support Shaarey Zedek Sisterhood and our members' work to bolster our synagogue. It's a great place to look for Chanukah gifts right before the holidays!

- Discover Unique Treasures – Our silent auction will feature an assortment of items, experiences, and gift certificates generously donated by local businesses and individuals. It's a perfect opportunity to find treasures while supporting a good cause.
- Make a Difference – By bidding on items, you actively contribute to the fundraiser's success. Your bids and purchases directly translate into resources for Shaarey Zedek.

How to Get Involved:

- Donate Items or Services – Contact Shawn Olds at shawnolds1967@gmail.com or 896-5199 to arrange pick up for small to medium items and delivery for larger items. Your contribution, no matter the value, will be greatly appreciated.
- Join Us November 19 - Add November 19 to your calendar and share the news about the fundraiser with your network.
- Spread the Word – The more people who attend and bid, the more significant an impact we can make together.
- Bid with Purpose – Bid generously and bid often. Because there isn't any overhead, every dollar raised will help one of our Shaarey Zedek children go to camp, support our social and educational programs, and help fund our Religious School.

THANK YOU IN ADVANCE FOR YOUR SUPPORT!
